INTRODUCTION

The Social Security Administration has been preparing estimates of health expenditures for more than two decades. The first estimates were limited to consumer direct outlays for medical care and the portion paid by private health insurance; the data applied to calendar year 1948 and were published in 1950 in the Social Security Bulletin. These consumer expenditures continued to be published annually through 1963. The data on private health insurance are now published annually in the Bulletin. This series includes information on the enrollment and financial experience of private health insurance organizations.

In 1953, public expenditures for health were reported on a fiscal year basis back to 1935 as part of estimates of social welfare expenditures. The series developed to include health outlays by public program and by other sources of payment, such as private health insurance, direct payments, and philanthropy.

Beginning with data for calendar 1962, the public and private portions of both series were combined to give an overall picture of national health spending by type of expenditure (hospital care, physicians' services, etc.) and source of funds. Beginning with 1966, similar data were reported on a fiscal year basis. More recently these fiscal year data have been distributed by three age groups. The calendar and fiscal year national data are published annually in various Social Security Administration reports.

With outlays for health rising at a rapid pace in recent years, the trend in the Nation's health spending has attracted widespread interest and concern. In order to provide the bases for further analysis and interpretation, all available data on health expenditures are presented in this compendium. Previously published data have been reviewed for comparability and revised where necessary. In addition, new estimates have been developed for many of the earlier years to make the compendium as complete as possible. No attempt at analysis is made here.

Readers are referred to the sources listed in the back of this volume for description and analysis of health expenditures data as well as detailed data and analysis of private health insurance.

1/ Includes premium payments for supplementary medical insurance by or in behalf of enrollees.
2/ Includes duplication in the Medicare and Medicaid amounts where premium payments for Medicare are financed by Medicaid for cash assistance recipients and, in some States, for the medically indigent.
3/ Includes medical benefits paid under public law by private insurance carriers and selfinsurers.
4/ Payments for services outside the hospital (excluding "other health services") represent only those made under contract medical care programs.
5/ Beginning in 1974, data not separable from total education expenditures.
6/ Beginning in 1974, included with "other public health activities."

1/ Includes premium payments for supplementary medical insurance by or in behalf of enrollees.
2/ Includes duplication in the Medicare and Medicaid amounts where premium payments for Medicare are paid for by Medicaid for eligible cash assistance recipients and, in some States, for the medically indigent.
3/ Includes medical benefits paid under public law by private insurance carriers and selfinsurers.
4/ Payments to services outside the hospital (excluding "other health services") represent only those made under contract medical care programs.
5/ Health activities of the Office of Economic Opportunity were transferred to the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare at midyear 1973.
